Tickets are measured in dollars and reflect directly how much money was given to purchase the tickets.

So for instance, if a ride cost $1.20 that person has to purchase $1.20 worth of tickets in real money.

Tickets can be used to buy games, food, and rides.

Hand-stamps and bracelets can be used for rides.

Credit cards and cash can be used for food.

Tickets are collected before entry to a ride or handstamps checked.

Turnstiles at the entrance to each ride count keep count of how many people have entered the ride for the day, but do not currently keep the time.

Each ticket has a unique ID number that can be used to trace when they were purchased. If a person purchased with a credit card, the identity of the individual can be determined by linking the starting ID of the set of tickets that was purchased at that time. Tickets function just like money and can be used to buy rides, food, and games.
